The university

The Evangelische Hochschule Berlin (EHB) / Protestant University of Applied Sciences Berlin (EHB) is a performance-oriented educational and research institution for the forward-looking and community-promoting SAGE occupational fields of social work, health/nursing, education and in the community. Around 1,600 students, more than 60 full-time professors/lecturers and around 200 lecturers learn, teach and research at one of the oldest training centres for social professions in Germany, which can look back on an educational tradition dating back to 1904.

The recognized high quality of teaching at EHB is characterized by intensive and professional support for students. The EHB maintains good contacts with sponsors and institutions of the social and health economy as well as with institutions of the Diakonie and the Protestant Church. In addition, there are cooperation and project partnerships with colleges and universities in Germany and abroad. The EHB is considered a competent partner for practice-oriented teaching and application-oriented research.
